CENTRAL OTAGO

Aotearoa, New Zealand. Home to Dhall & Nash as well as a number of world renowned wine regions, including Central Otago, which holds the title of the world's southernmost wine region.

New Zealand is known the world over for producing exemplary Sauvignon Blanc, with 60% of its planted area (22,085 of total 37,129 hectares in 2017) being dedicated to the variety.

New Zealand Pinot Noirs are also highly sought after and praised, particularly those from Martinborough, Marlborough and Central Otago. That doesn't mean, however, that New Zealand isn't capable of making fantastic renditions of many different varieties, from rich Chardonnays to punchy Gamays.

Winemaking in New Zealand can be traced back to the 19th Century, during the colonial period. Keen oenologist James Busby, also known for his part in drafting the Treaty of Waitangi, was known to grow grapes on his land near Waitangi in 1836.

New Zealand's climate is largely maritime, with cooler summer seasons and milder winters than would be expected at similar latitudes in northern continents. New Zealand also tends to have cool nights, even throughout summer.

144 ISLANDS

BAY OF ISLANDS

Unique, singular wines from the Bay of Islands.

144 Islands is dedicated to the production of quality single-vineyard wines from their home estate in the Bay of Islands, as well as specially selected sites throughout the Far North of New Zealand.

They place emphasis on producing wines that convey a point of time and place, honouring the rich history of their region, the birthplace of a nation.

Owner Jake's family have been faming this land since before he was born. When he was 22, he took a nearby job in viticulture and moved home. He was helping his father to explore a block of dense bush and they were surprised to find a long abandoned garden, with grapevines, not having been pruned in likely 70 years, which had reverted to their wild state.. It was at this point they started to discuss the prospect of planting a vineyard on this land, and so, 144 Islands was born...

DE LA TERRE

HAWKE'S BAY

'De la terre' – literally 'of the earth' is a reference to both the vineyard soils and the earth brick construction used for the winery and cellar door.

De La Terre's winemaking methods are largely traditional with emphasis on minimal handling to retain the integrity and concentration of fruit. Food and wine matching is a particular focus – the wine style is designed to provide elegant wines to accompany food.

POPPIES

MARTINBOROUGH

It is the intention of Poppies Martinborough to make beautifully hand-crafted wines that simply show the character and evoke the varietal flavours and purity of expression from the land and the hands of the makers.

A personal love of the biological and organic approach to farming is preferred, although not certified within a commercial footprint. They are cautious and respectful utilising science, technology and understanding the past.

JOHNER ESTATE

WAIRARAPA

In the early 1970s Karl Heinz Johner studied Oenology and Viticulture in Geisenheim, Germany. When travelling the world, looking at Pinot Noir, he encountered New Zealand for the first time.

The landscape felt quite familiar, but what fascinated Karl even more was the Pinot Noir. The cool climate conditions are perfect and there's a booming spirit.

Karl firmly believes that the Wairarapa is the ideal place outside of Burgundy to grow world-class Pinot Noir.

FOLIUM MARLBOROUGH

Folium Vineyard is an 8ha vineyard located in the Brancott Valley, Marlborough.

The soil was created by the ancient glacial action and river system. Low vigour clay-based soil in the vineyard can retain sufficient moisture during dry summers to balance the growth of the vines without using irrigation systems.

Folium Vineyard believes that winemaking starts in the vineyard. Detailed care in the vineyard is carried out through the growing season to produce high quality fruit.

Grasshopper Rock CENTRAL OTAGO

GRASSHOPPER ROCK CENTRAL OTAGO

Grasshopper Rock was established in 2003 after the founders – a group of friends, spearheaded by Phil Handford – set their visions on a prime piece of Central Otago land. The vision was always to focus on a single vineyard Pinot Noir and to produce a wine which would, with time, be recognized as a unique expression of Pinot Noir that only this site can produce.

Alexandra, the sub-region they chose, is the southernmost sub-region in Central Otago, (which also makes it the world's southernmost pinot noir winegrowing sub-region!) Further to the east, away from the Southern Alps, than other sub-regions, makes this also the driest sub-region. An old gold mining water race now brings water from the surrounding hills for much-needed irrigation and frost fighting.

Hawkshead came to be when in 1995, Denis Marshall bought a plot of land in the Gibbston Valley after forging himself a long and successful career in politics, specialising in horticulture and conservation. In 2001 the first Pinot Noir vines were planted, quickly followed with more plantings in 2003. Two years later, he and his equally passionate partner, Ulrike, established the Hawkshead Vineyard Partnership. # AUSTRALIA

MCLAREN VALE

COONAWARRA

CLARE VALLEY

Across the ditch from Aotearoa New Zealand is Australia, another new world wine producer that is proving itself to be worthy of international acclaim.

Australian wine is unique in that it can boast about being top in both quality and quantity. It is the world's fifth largest exporter and in fact, in 2000 it exported more wine to the UK than France did. And it leads by example too - in 2004 Australia hosted the world's first International Biodynamic Wine Forum, and has been seeing a steady increase in producers following organic and biodynamic practices over the years.

Winemaking history in Australia can be traced back to 1788 when vine cuttings were brought over by 'The First Fleet' to New South Wales. Wine from these vines ultimately didn't work out but the settlers were undeterred by the difficulty they were facing and by the 1820's production had started to increase enough to warrant a domestic wine trade.

Shiraz (Syrah), Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, Chardonnay, Sauvignon Blanc, Sémillon, and Riesling are the notable varieties grown in Australia, many of such being cultivated in the more southern regions of the otherwise hot and dry continent, although every state in Australia has its share of vineyards.

CHAMBERS ROSEWOOD

RUTHERGLEN

Since establishment in 1858 in Victoria's famed Rutherglen region, winemaking duties at Chambers Rosewood have been handed down through five generations.

These wines are a national treasure; wines expertly crafted from unctuous material that has matured in the family cellars for more than a century.

KNAPPSTEIN

CLARE VALLEY

Steeped in history and synonymous with the Clare Valley in South Australia, the Knappstein Enterprise Winery has enjoyed a long and revered reputation as a maker of premium wines.

The Knappstein name has been involved in the wine business in South Australia since 1895. As a third-generation vigneron founding owner, Tim Knappstein has some good winemaking genes in his make-up. His ancestor who came out from Germany in the 1870s was a co-founder of the Stanley Wine Company in Clare in 1895. # UNITED STATES

WASHINGTON

OREGON

CALIFORNIA

Dhall & Nash represents an array of wine producers that span across the West Coast of the United States of America, including California which produces 89% of America's wine. Infact, if California was a country in and of itself, it would be the 4th largest producer of wine in the world. As it stands though, USA as a whole holds this title, behind only Italy, Spain and France.

Some of the first explorers of the United States actually dubbed it 'Vinland' initially due to the sheer number of grapes they found growing, but the official year viticulture and winemaking can be traced back to is 1562, when French Huguenot settlers started growing grapes in Florida. When the first western settlers came to America, in Virginia and the Carolinas, winemaking was an official goal laid out in the founding charters.

The prohibition era in the 1800's nearly wiped out the winemaking industry in the United States, with few vineyards managing to stay in production at a time when only sacramental wine was lawful. When prohibition was repealed in the 1930's, the taste for wine had drastically changed and sweet, high-alcohol wines were the preferred style, and as such, production was limited. Over the coming decades though, The University of California as well as some New York universities, studied and published numerous reports on viticulture and winemaking and started to offer education in this field. As a result, by the 1970's and 1980's, the worlds eyes were back on America as they started to rise from the ashes.

The West Coast of America has an oceanic climate in the northernmost regions, and a mediterranean climate further south. The coastline is blessed with mild temperatures in the summertime compared to many inland regions.

Charles Smith is the only person to have received Winemaker of the Year distinctions by both Wine Enthusiast (2014) and Food & Wine (2009). # OPUS ONE

CALIFORNIA

Two names which are unavoidable when talking about Bordeaux blends are Mondavi and Rothschild. In 1978, after initially meeting by chance in Hawai'i, Philippe invited Robert to visit him in Bordeaux, where they hatched a plan...

Château Mouton Rothschild winemaker Lucien Sionneau, and Robert Mondavi's son, Tim, made the partnership's first vintage in 1979. In 1981 the first case of this astounding, and yet unnamed, wine was sold for $24,000, at the time the highest price ever paid for Californian wine.

A year later they began to design a label and think about a name. They both agreed on a Latin Phrase to make it easier in their respective homelands. Philippe suggested Opus: meaning a composer's first masterpiece. After sleeping on this name the word One was added.

FRANCE

CHAMPAGNE

ALSACE

BURGUNDY

PROVENCE

Few countries in this world are more synonymous with wine as France. One of the world's top, and earliest, producers, the French have had many centuries to perfect the craft.

Wine production in France can officially be traced back to the 6th century BC, though it is widely thought to have started earlier, and in fact some historical grape seeds found on lake shores have been dated at 12,000 years old. Whilst the Celts are thought to be responsible for the beginning of viticulture in France, the Romans were largely to thank for the widespread success of wine-growing, as they planted vines throughout Bordeaux, Burgundy, Alsace, Champagne, Languedoc, Loire Valley and the Rhône.

As the centuries passed, wine remained a staple part of both French culture and the economy. Throughout the middle-ages, many monks were tasked with the upkeep of vineyards and winemaking. Of this time, one monk in particular made a significant impact on French wine - Dom Pérignon. An exceptional winemaker, he was working in Champagne before bubbles were the norm. He started producing wines that had a light fizz. At first this was considered a flaw, but with fine tuning, as he said, it was like "tasting the stars."

The 19th and 20th centuries saw a lot of change come to French winemaking. The French revolution saw many vineyards confiscated and in the following years, quality started to suffer. Another crushing blow came when a crop-destroying louse species called Phylloxera started to decimate vineyards throughout the regions. This was only amended when it was discovered that American rootstock was naturally resistant and grafting was able to salvage vineyards in a number of regions.

Emperor Napoleon III in 1855 requested the development of a classification system to identify the best quality Bordeaux wines - this was done by issuing them 'growth' statuses from first through to fifth - a system that is still largely in place today. As well as this, the AOC system or 'appellation d'origine contrôlée' was put in place in the 1930's. This helps to maintain the authenticity of place or terroir where certain foods and wines are concerned in order to prevent fraud and assure of quality.

Today, nothing conjures up a more romantic image in the mind of a wine-lover than to hear the phrase "French wine". This pioneering old-world king produces 7-8 million bottles a year from a number of unique regions. The vastly varying terroirs of France are at the core of its success and the winemakers hold it very dear to their hearts.

BILLECART SALMON

CHAMPAGNE

All twenty-seven of the 3-Star Michelin Restaurants in France serve Billecart-Salmon Champagne.

Situated in the Champagne heartland of Mareuil-sur-Aÿ, near Epernay, Billecart-Salmon has been under family ownership and management since its founding in 1818. It is a family-run winery with a majority share owned by the Billecart family. The Billecart family still lives on site and there remains a strong sense of long-visioned family continuity at play. Today there's the seventh generation Mathieu Roland-Billecart overseeing everyday business as CEO, working closely with Antoine and François.

Unlike the legal minimum required for Champagne wines – 15 months for non-vintage wines and 36 months for vintage wines – Billecart-Salmon bottles are laid down for a minimum of between 3 and 10 years in its chalk cellars before they are judged ready for tasting and release.

"If there is a bartender favourite it is perhaps Billecart Salmon – not just because it's fine fizz but because it's a medium-sized house still under family control. That's the way people like to think of champagne, when largely it isn't."

- Drinks International, 2018 Brands Champagne Report

"Billecart-Salmon is in the very top echelon of Champagne houses – it is one of only four awarded the 10/10 rating... The mark of Billecart is made not by the heavy footfall of concentration, power and presence, but rather the fairy touch of delicacy and crystal-clear fidelity."

ANDRÉ CLOUET CHAMPAGNE

It took the Clouet family more than two centuries and several generations to build up their collection of vineyards, the divine old masters of the House in Bouzy.

André Clouet's descendants took over his estate, ensuring that it remained in the family. The team working to perpetuate the House of André Clouet is inspired above all by the desire to preserve the personality of the champagnes.

Growing up, Jean-François Clouet, the current Clouet at the helm, thought the wine tanks were steel giants protecting the wine. He called them his heroes, and as such, each individual one has a name. Superman, Zeus, Thor, Laser, D'artagnan, Zorro, Sophie Marceau, Heather Locklear and Michelle Pfeiffer and Rocky work together to give you the Clouet collection.

DOMAINE MURÉ ALSACE

Veronique and Thomas Muré represent the 12th generation at René Muré. The Domaine has been practising organic viticulture for a decade and is currently engaged in biodynamic experimentation as well as extensive re-planting with old selections and tight spacing, trying, as he put it, to take things in the vineyards back to his grandfather's days.

In these warm sites, he is particularly concerned with developing methods to reduce sugar accumulation and retain acidity. The heavy iron rich (though also stony) soils in the vineyards are in its upper reaches, which are also the best ventilated, and this makes an ideal combination for aromatics and Pinot Noir.

The Pothiers family has been on this land for centuries. Vines occupied most of it and some cows were raised on the plots that were too wet for vine cultivation. The most recent generation has been making a shift toward biodynamic practices in the vineyard and the results are paying off.

Rémi Jobard started making wine in 1992, working alongside his father until the latter's retirement in 1996.

LOUIS JADOT

BURGUNDY

We all know just how important these individual bits of land are in Burgundy. It was with the purchase of the Beaune Premier Cru Clos des Ursules that the story of Maison Louis Jadot began in 1826. In all, it took 30 years for Louis Henri Denis Jadot to lay the foundations of a family-owned domaine. He would contribute to the renown of the wines of Burgundy by developing a negociant business focused on selling the wines in Northern European markets.

Nowadays, Pierre-Henry Gagey is at the helm (since 1992) with a team of around 80 people working together to keep alive the dream of a Burgundy accessible to all those in search of high-quality wines.

BURGUNDY

A high-level family Domaine in Morey-Saint-Denis. The father and son duo, Hubert and Laurent Lignier manage 9 hectares and make 24 wines (Bourgogne, village, premier and grand cru appellations). The vineyards have been ploughed since the 1990s, without the use of weedkiller or insecticides. The "climates" and great terroirs' soils are firmly respected in order to favour microorganisms and therefore create the essential balance for the vine's growth. Since 2011, they've used organic protective treatments.

BEAUJOLAIS

Once a place to rest along the pilgrims' route of Santiago de Compostela, Château des Jacques was purchased by maison Louis Jadot in 1996.

Although the domain has, historically, always had close ties to Burgundy, the links between Beaujolais and the wider Burgundian region have not always been all that well defined, this is a reminder that, due to its size - 18,000 hectares in total - Beaujolais has its own distinctive identity. Beaujolais' soils are completely unique, based mainly on pink granite, a crystalline bedrock that was formed 350 million years ago. Beaujolais also derives its uniqueness from its grape, Gamay Noir. Gamay is the only plant that thrives on these infertile soils, and the wines it creates have always been numbered among the great red wines of Burgundy.

PROVENCE

The Gassier family, originating from Barcelonnette have links to Provençal nobility dating back to 1421, and purchased the Château Gassier and its vineyards in 1982. Situated in AOP Côtes de Provence Sainte -Victoire, they are immensely proud of their coveted location. It is one of the coolest areas in Provence, meaning the wines are fresh, the yields are low (ie. concentrated!) and the grenache and syrah are superbly aromatic.

The Esprit is their 'coolest' rosé, with a label that has won praise from Forbes Magazine, and routinely earns scores in the high 80's/early 90's, truly an excellent feat for the price point.

The estate has been officially organic since 2016.

SPAIN

PENEDES

GALICIA

RIBERA DEL DUERO

SHERRY / JEREZ

Whilst Spain trails behind Italy and France in terms of wine-production, it boasts 2.9 million acres (over 1.17 million hectares) of vineyard plantings, making it the number one widest-planted wine-producing country.

As well as holding quite a hefty title for vineyard plantings, the country is steeped in history, and there is evidence to suggest that the Peninsula was growing vines as far back as the Tertiary period, an astonishing 66 million to 2.6 million years ago. Cultivation however, was believed to be established sometime between 4000 - 3000 BC. It was in 1100 BC though, that the trading post Cádiz was set up in Southern Spain by the Phoenicians, a culture centred around Lebanon that is widely touted to have had one of the more significant impacts on global wine history.

Throughout its history, Spanish wine has seen periods of immense success and popularity. The Roman empire was known to widely export and consume Spanish wine and some refer to this period as the "golden age" of Spanish wine.

After a relatively quiet few centuries following the fall of the Roman empire and the subsequent settlement of barbarian tribes and Muslim communities, the middle-ages rolled on and saw an increase in wine production as the monks started to take on the vineyards and introduce systems to improve production and quality. Many Spanish wines were exported to Britain during this time.

Sherry in particular, the well-known fortified wine from the historic Jerez region was popular throughout Europe, but still Spain wasn't managing to keep up with Italy and France in terms of exports. It wasn't until the 1800's when an invasive louse called phylloxera decimated vineyards throughout Europe - mainly in France, that Spain was able to step out from France's shadow. With the shortage of French grapes and wine, many vignerons started to move to Spain to continue their trade, bringing with them a wealth of knowledge and expertise that was able to lift Spain up to realise its stellar potential.

Spain is known to be the motherland to a great number of native varieties. Its soils are home to an estimated 600 varieties of grape today, though 80% of production focuses on only 20 or so. Winemakers in Spain often refer to the winemaking process as "elaborar" (to elaborate) in favour of the more commonly used "fabricar" (to produce) as a way of respecting and acknowledging the importance of the terroir and grapes, as they believe they more nurture the vines than 'produce' them.

PENEDÈS

Parés Baltà is a family-owned winery in the Penedès region with tradition that goes back to 1790. The grapes come from 5 estates situated around the winery and in the mountains of Penedès.

They have always practiced organic viticulture and have been organically certified since 2004. They even have a flock of sheep to fertilize the vineyards and bees to help pollinate the vines, bringing in the essence of the Mediterranean ecosystem.

The winemaking is in the hands of Maria Elena Jimenez and Marta Casas, enologists and wives of Joan and Josep. Two skilled young women whose efforts are reflected in the quality of the wines that are produced at Parés Baltà; showing fine character and concentration yet with elegance and balance.

The Barros family has grown Albarino grapes since the 1970's. José Barros planted 10ha of vines, which at that time was one of the most decisive commitments to the Albarino variety as well as one of the largest vineyards in Galicia. The winery was founded under the name Maio de Mendoza.

Although, these days, it is one of the references of the Rías Baixas Denomination of Origin, Maio de Mendoza holds on to its family business roots, values and passion for the Albarino variety. This is the commitment of the technical staff led by Cristina Mantilla, one of the most important oenologists in the country.

PORTUGAL

DOURO

Another old-world superstar is Portugal. This country, on the Iberian Peninsula to the west of Spain is another land rich in history and tradition.

Despite a history spanning back to at least 2000 BC and a close proximity to other European powerhouses, it's surprisingly underrepresented in the international markets, with the exception of their world renowned sweet fortified Port wines.

The Phoenicians, a culture centred around Lebanon that is widely touted to have had one of the more significant impacts on global wine history, set their sights on Portugal in the 10th Century BC, they cultivated the land with grapes and techniques from the Middle East and Carthage, and what was started by the Phoenicians was continued by the Greeks a few centuries later. Evidence in the form of ancient 'cratera' (Greek vases) used to dilute wine with water have been found in archaeological digs.

Much like many areas in Europe, the Romans had a significant influence on the wine culture and industry, producing enough to drink locally and export to Rome and England. Again too, barbarians and monks later took ownership of many of the vineyards, though interestingly, in Portugal, many of the local authorities maintained a significant amount of power even over the Church.

Portuguese wine is unique in that it boasts a similar length and complexity of history, but doesn't command the same price as it's other old-world counterparts, whilst also offering a remarkably unique array of varieties.

To talk about Portugal though, and not go into detail on Port, would be akin to not addressing the (delicious) elephant in the room. Port, or "vinho do Porto" is a rich style of wine produced in the Douro Valley, which holds the title of the third oldest protected wine region in the world. (Tokaj-Hegyalja and Chianti hold the first two places.) This fortified style of wine grew in popularity when the English discovered it in the late 1600's. By the 1700's it was surging in popularity and Port had a growing international reputation, for which many shipping companies were established and named. Not to miss out, some Portuguese natives also set up their own shipping and production of Port to meet demand. The Ferreira family were the first to do so in 1751 and have since been recognised as pioneers for the region.

NIEPOORT PORTO

DOURO

The Niepoort family were Port shippers of Dutch origin that have been making Port in the Douro Valley since 1842. It is a relatively small Port house but with a big reputation! Despite being the second smallest shippers in the trade, they are second to none in quality.

In the winemaking arena, Dirk Niepoort is a passionate advocate of the traditional method of "treading" by foot to extract maximum colour and flavour. Their Ports are all made at the old Museu de Lagares in Vale de Mendiz, which has the last remaining circular granite Lagares (low stone troughs) in the Douro.

Nat'Cool is Dirk Niepoort's baby - naturally 'cool and funky'. To be Nat'Cool the wine must be natural, have minimal winemaking artifice and with very low or zero added Sulphur. In addition, the wine must be bottled in one litre sizes (Dirk wanted the wines to also be great value.) and most importantly, should be focused on the expression of terroir from the region. He created Nat'Cool as a response to a market (both in Portugal and abroad) that wanted cool, easy going, naturally-made wines that could be enjoyed every day - at home, by-the-glass in restaurants, out on a fun picnic, or wherever. They had to be lip-smackingly more-ish.

BRUNELLO DI MONTALCINO

A wine-lovers paradise. Italy. Not a lot more needs to be said. Its reputation precedes it. Battling it out with France for the title of the world's number one wine producer, this country boasts a history spanning back thousands of years, a culture combining viticulture, art and gastronomy, and a unique and diverse climate - it's no wonder sommeliers and newbies alike agree - Italy is a winner. In the book "The Wine Bible", author Karen MacNeil states "In Italy, wine is food... wine and bread are as essential to an Italian dinner as a fork and knife (probably more so)."

Wine-making had long been a practice in Italy when the Greeks arrived sometime before 500 BC, likely for millennia. In fact, they dubbed the land 'Oenotria', meaning 'the land of wine'. The subsequent Greek influence is largely credited for the success of Italian wine-making in its early days, though this was largely in the more southern parts of this wine wonderland. In the north and central areas, the traditions of the Etruscans - who lived in Italy before the rise of Rome - were more prominent. Whilst the Greeks were to thank for introducing many a vine to Italy, the Etruscans were advanced in that it is thought they were using temperature-controlled fermentation long before the 20th Century in which it became popular.

The Greeks and the Etruscans are in a sense, only the embryonic stage of the phenomenon that is Italian wine. With the rise of the Roman empire, so too came the rise of Italian wine. They were enamoured with the fact land in nearly every region of Italy was not just suitable but ideal for viticulture - and so both demand and supply increased as tales of this prosperous land were shared.

Italian wine continued to evolve throughout the centuries, riding the waves of foreign conquests, turbulent political climates, changing tastes and religious influence. Between all these factors, a significant number of vines were left to develop and as such, a great number of unique varieties were born in the varying appellations and regions.

1963 saw the introduction of the first official Italian system of classification, which was further adapted in 1992 that helps to control and identify wine quality and labelling systems.

This rich tapestry of history peppered with influence from multiple cultures, uniquely evolving to become quintessential Italy, has blessed us with what we have today. Tradition stays close to the hearts of Italian winemakers but modern adaptations to the craft are being embraced - but the core of Italy is as strong as ever - good food and even better wine.

LA STOPPA

EMILIA-ROMAGNA

La Stoppa is an ancient producer that with its vineyards climbs solitary on the slopes of the Trebbiola valley. The vineyards cover 58 hectares, 28 for woods and oaks, chestnut and robinia trees and 30 for vineyards, all merged and dominated by a medieval tower. More than a hundred years ago, La Stoppa's former owner, Ageno, planted French vines and renamed them with an Italian twist: Bordò, Bordò white and Pinò.

In 1973 La Stoppa was bought by the Pantaleoni family, who quickly rationalized the plants and renovated the winery. Today the company is run by Elena Pantaleoni, who together with Giulio Armani wanted the major investments to be dedicated to the vineyard, managed according to the organic method and certified by the Suolo and Salute Institute.

TUSCANY

Le Macchiole is in Bolgheri, Tuscany, on the Etruscan Coast. In this magical place, where rolling hills are blanketed by forest, where vineyards and olive trees meet with the Tyrrhenian Sea, Le Macchiole has taken shape over time.

Wine is made in the vineyards, but also meticulous management of the winemaking stage is essential to achieve quality. Experimentation is ceaseless: separate vinification of each vineyard plot by using methods that respect each vintage's climate trend and length of aging varying according to the character of every single wine. This is the only way to make wines with personality.

SAN FELICE

TUSCANY

San Felice in its current form was founded in 1968. The estate is located in Castelnuovo Berardenga, the southernmost commune of Chianti Classico, and extends over 650 hectares, 140 of which are vineyards and another 60 olive groves (15,000 trees).

Defining Agricola San Felice as a "project" means to connote it as something more than just a productive company, making it also the reason for the multiple joints of its activities. In particular, since becoming part of the Allianz S.p.A. Group, Agricola San Felice has seen its commitments on the wine front, in particular scientific research, to be extended in quantity and quality.

The goodness of the Agricola San Felice project is faithful to the success, the constant growth and the numerous awards received.

ENGLAND

SUSSEX

Ranking up there in terms of consumption, but a fairly quiet player when it comes to production, the UK is starting to see a bit of light and attention where winemaking is concerned.

England has always loved wine. Plagued by a wet and cold climate, it was long considered to be a love that was destined to be long distance. The Romans did introduce winemaking to England during their reign, but with less success than many of the other European settlements. It is thought much of the English wine at this time was used for sacramental purposes and imports from other countries were favoured for casual drinking. As time went on, imports from new-world regions increased as well. As of 2014, the UK ranks 6th in the world for overall consumption .

Despite this clear passion, it is not the first place to come to mind when one thinks of wine regions, but this country is starting to turn heads and show people that it is possible to make good wine in what is generally considered to be a dreary climate.

These days, Sussex, Surrey and Kent are starting to emerge as rather impressive wine regions as summers start to get a little warmer. Their soils are rich in limestone, which as we know, is a dream for winemakers wishing to make sparkling wines rich in minerality and complexity. Their wines are turning heads and in some cases, this new player is beating out major players from Champagne in competitions and tastings.

Definitely watch this space.

DIGBY FINE ENGLISH

Named for Sir Kenelm Digby, a man dubbed as an 'unsung hero of wine', Digby Fine English are producing sparkling wines that are, as they say, a 'spirited expression of Englishness.' Sir Kenelm Digby epitomised the 17th century English spirit of creativity – he was a philosopher, patron of the arts and pirate who adored cooking, science and conversation. His most enduring contribution was the invention of the modern wine bottle in the 1630's to overcome the vagaries of shipping wine in barrel. Digby is the first pure negociant in England – they believe the starting point for world-class fizz is working with proven, best-in-class vineyards, followed through with an understanding of the refined art of blending. Their Leander Pink Cuvée raises money for the Leander Academy, shaping the next generation of world-class rowers.

GERMANY

MOSEL

Germany is more often associated with beer and tasty sausages than wine, but anyone who has tasted a refreshing German Riesling knows that this European old-world player means business when it comes to producing some seriously delicious wine.

As with many European wine regions, the Romans are credited as having one of the first significant impacts on the German wine industry around 70 - 240 AD when they brought viticultural practices with them during their colonisations.

During the middle ages, monasteries took over the viticultural sites throughout Germany and are today credited with planting some of the finest vineyards in the land. It is said that in the 17th and 18th century, German wine was held in as high regard as French wine. Nearly all regions of Germany were cultivated and estimates suggest that nearly four times as much land was planted with vines in 1500 than there is today. This was a high-point for German viticulture, and it thereafter saw a decrease due to improved beer-brewing methods and increased wine imports.

1775 saw a twist of fate that would change German wine for the longhaul. A courier delivering the permission to harvest was delayed for a fortnight. In waiting, noble-rot set into most of the Riesling crops in Johannisberg. Winemakers were surprised when they used the grapes, that the resulting wine was rich, sweet and frankly quite delicious. They termed the wine 'Spätlese', or late harvest. This was to be the first step toward the intentional production of botrytised wines and the controlled differentiation of wines with an emphasis on ripeness upon harvest. This evolved into what we now know as the Prädikat system - Germany's answer to controlled winemaking identification systems.

Following Napoleon's invasions in the 19th century, many of the vineyards held by the Church were sold off to private landowners. Later this century, the dreaded phylloxera epidemic hit and many vineyards were decimated and indigenous varieties lost, but the introduction of resistant rootstock and grafting saved the industry.

Germany's wine regions are incredibly unique as they are some of the most northern in the world, and are mostly situated around the Mosel and Rhine rivers and their tributaries. These make for steep, picturesque vineyards with great microclimates but are tediously hard work for the viticulturalists. The country is planted with over 100 varieties but two aromatic whites - Riesling and Muller-Thurgau - account for more than 40% of plantings. Internationally, German wines are typically associated with a higher level of sweetness, but domestically the drier styles are favoured and so wines from all over the spectrum are represented here and represented well.

BEKAA VALLEY

Another dark horse of wine - Lebanon is seldom at the top of the list when one thinks of prosperous wine regions, but the reason for this is hard to understand, considering this fabled land is at the centre of Phoenecian culture and in many respects outdates viticulture throughout even the most established old-world sites. For thousands of years this ancient country has been toiling away creating some really special wines. And it makes sense really - wine is such a fantastic compliment for Middle-Eastern cuisine!

The Phoenecians - a culture credited as being the original cultivators of the vine in many of the coveted old world sites and having an extraordinary impact on the global wine industry as a whole - were in fact centred around Lebanon. The very term 'wine' is said to have derived from their tongue describing the fermentation of grapes. A thriving civilisation between 1550 - 300 BC, they established many trade routes throughout Europe and the Mediterranean which they utilised to spread knowledge and skill when it comes to winemaking.

Speaking of Lebanese wine without going into religion is near impossible. Hosea (780 - 725 BC), an Israelite prophet, said unto his followers that they must return to God so that "they will blossom as the vine, [and] their fragrance will be like the wine of Lebanon" and said "his fame shall be like the wine of Lebanon" (14:8), so it is clear that viticulture was not only established in the region by this time, but idealised as well. The wedding at which Jesus Christ is said to have turned water to wine in the Christian faith took place in the land of Canaan, which in Modern times would be in southern Lebanon.

Despite a history rich in viticulture and culture, the modern political situation in the country has for some time made it difficult to sustain the industry. Wars and conflict plaguing the region have made it difficult in many areas to thrive. In the last couple of decades however, there are whispers of a 'renaissance' for this original player. In the last 20 years, the number of wineries in the Bekaa valley has increased from 5 to 35, and this endurance and determination is a trend that many expect to continue.

Lebanon boasts a very dry climate with around 300 days of sunshine a year. Coupled with chilly nights, the grapes benefit from a long growing season and the perfect conditions to grow thick skins and develop fantastic concentration.

MOUNT BARGYLUS

Syria's wine culture is almost as old as its capital: Damascus was established in the 8th millennium BC and is one of the oldest continuously inhabited places of mankind. Furthermore, the oldest preserved wine relic in the world was found not far from it: a grape press, dated to a period around 8,000 BC. The scholar Pliny the Elder (*23 o.24 to 79 A.D.) mentioned Mount Bargylus six millennia later in his work Naturalis historia and described it as a massif mountain running parallel to the Mediterranean coast. This is the oldest fully preserved systematic encyclopedia. And grapes grew densely over its slopes during the Greek-Roman period.

Later on it were the Christian Orthodox monks who systematically cultivated the wine in Syria, which of course was not particularly widespread. And the amount of current wineries in the country is still unknown.

Syria lies at the eastern extremity of the Mediterranean winelands. The highest profile winery in the country is Domaine de Bargylus, which lies in Latakia province on the slopes of the Coastal Mountain Range (Mount Bargylus) to the north of Lebanon.

Domaine de Bargylus is a wine estate on the slopes of the Coastal Mountain Range in Syria. These mountains, known as Mount Bargylus in the Hellenistic and Roman periods, produced notable wines up until the rise of Islam. Islam & alcohol are not natural "bedmates" so Syrian grape growers get more money by growing table (eating) grapes rather than varieties destined for the bottle.

Centuries ago, wine was big business in Syria and more recently a few pioneers had tried unsuccessfully to resurrect it. The Saadé family have persevered and now own the only modern commercial winery in Syria even whilst a tragic civil war rages close by.

Yet, despite the odds, Domaine de Bargylus has defied them all by reaching the tables of some of the best eateries around the world. Their goal was always to produce premium wines that stood their ground with top Bordeaux and Rhône wines. To help fulfil their vision they brought on board the famed consultant Bordeaux vintner Stéphane Derenoncourt. He still remembers the first time he saw the foothills of Mount Bargylus. "I found it majestic. And I thought, this is where we will make some serious wine," Derenoncourt told Wine Spectator.

CHILE

ITATA VALLEY

MAULE

Officially a 'new world' wine producer, Chile is interesting in that its history is long and vast, despite this title and its rather new emergence in the western-world.

The Chilean wine industry can trace its origins back to the Spanish colonisation of South America in the 1500s. Keen vigneron themselves, they brought with them Vitis vinifera vines or the 'common black grape' in order to make wine where they settled, particularly for sacramental purposes.

For a time, despite a number of plantings from settlers, restrictions were placed on Chilean vineyards by Spain, with the reason being it was expected they should be importing Spanish wine and merely supplementing that with local production, and in the 16th Century, exports from Chile and Peru were banned, which hit what industry they had quite hard. Not the type to give up though, Chile simply shrugged its shoulders and made more wine. They preferred the taste of their own wines to those imported from Spain anyway. (At the time the wines did not fare as well on long, hot voyages.)

Despite a close connection to Spain, Chile's winemaking practices were inspired largely by the French. Particularly enamoured by the Chateaux in Bordeaux, many Chilean landowners started to bring in French grape varieties, and when the infamous phylloxera plague decimated vineyards throughout many established regions in the late 1800's, many desperate vigneron turned to Chile - which was spared due to its terrain.

The last century and a half saw many triumphs and defeats for Chile - but it's fair to say it has won out in the end. Currently, it is the world's seventh largest producer of wine and fifth largest exporter, and its wine can be found in over 90 countries. This wasn't made possible though, until after the introduction of a democratic government in 1990. In the three years following this, 10,000 hectares of various varieties were planted and there was serious investment made in terms of new technologies and a focus on growth within the international markets.

Chile's terroir is part of what makes this country so unique. Full of mountainous terrain and valleys, the country is extremely long and narrow, with the Andes mountains to the east and the Pacific ocean to the west. Many of the areas utilise melting snowcaps from the Andes for irrigation and it is classified technically as having a Mediterranean climate with summer temperatures averaging 15-18 °C with possible highs up to 30 °C.

ARGENTINA

CUYO

Argentinian wine is a bit of a contradiction, in that its wine history is ancient and vast, with centuries under its belt and a hefty production, and yet it is only just starting to capture the attention of winelovers internationally. In a few short decades, a glowing reputation has emerged and wine from this South American player is coveted amongst Sommeliers the world over.

Argentina's wine history is said to have started at the beginning of the 16th Century when the Spanish started to colonise South America. At the time, a variety called Criolla was popular, though it produced less-than-great quality wine, it did so in large quantities and was only the beginning of a long road to the modern Argentinian wine we know today.

Argentina's neighbour, Chile, played a valuable role in cementing Argentina's name in the wine history books. As Chilean winemakers started to focus heavily on producing world-class wines in collaboration with North American winemakers, Argentina followed suit, riding the coat-tails and branching out to cater to the growing demand for South American wines that was growing internationally. Now, Argentina is the 5th largest wine producer in the world.

Some would see the dry climate, harsh rocky terrain and quiver with fear. With a lot of places around the Andes mountains rarely exceeding more than 250 mm a year and summer temperatures spiking to over 40°C, it is a harsh climate indeed. But winemakers swear this stresses the vines and therein lies the secret to good wine. A stressed wine focuses its energy on fewer grape clusters, and in doing so, the flavour and concentration is superb.

A big attraction? The price. Or better worded - the value. The pricepoint this wine sits at is simply astonishing when one considers the quality of the wine. For a region that has been perfecting the craft for so long, your dollar goes a really long way where Argentinian wine is concerned.

Proving that wasn't a one-off, he then won at the Decanter World Wine Awards 2009.

His reputation as one of Argentina's finest was sealed with a Gold medal at London's International Wine Challenge. Watered by the melting snow from the Andes mountains, the Cuyo region including Mendoza and San Juan has cold, dry weather during the winter, while its summer days are hot and sunny with pleasant cool nights. This di-urnal range leads to exceptional wines from single vineyards, including the emblematic La Mascota vineyard.

MASCOTA

CUYO

The Mascota vineyards lie at the foot of the Andes Mountains, barely a thousand meters away from the Mendoza River. The vines receive fresh breezes descending from the mountains and blowing along the river, all of which contributes to the generation of wide temperature ranges. The soil is predominantly alluvial, with a clay-loam surface, and rock is found at a depth of 60 cm. And so it is that Finca La Mascota finds itself set in perfect surroundings, and one the most renowned and prestigious wine-growing regions in Mendoza.

The vineyards cover 100 hectares of land, 97 of which are implanted with grapes. The oldest wine is a Cabernet Sauvignon lot which was planted 41 years ago. The average age of the vineyards is 30 years, ranging from the 5 year-old new blocks to the oldest ones planted in the 70's.

HINE COGNAC

Hine Cognac saw its origination in the 1760's, when Thomas Hine set out from his native Dorset to learn the secrets of how cognac, his father's favourite tippie, was produced. It was however, during the French Revolution and he found himself, an Englishman on French soil, imprisoned at the Château de Jarnac, where he later married Françoise-Elisabeth, the daughter of his hosts, and gave his name to the house. Since this dramatic arrival, six generations of the Hine family have succeeded one another at the head of Thomas Hine & Co.

The House of Hine cherishes a solid belief: that a great cognac is above all a great white wine. Hine cognacs share the same attributes of delicacy, vivacity and finesse, and bear witness to the complex nature of the soils in which the roots of the vines are anchored.

Much is owed to the Indian subcontinent for influences. Indian botanicals are used for many gins as a 'point of difference' and around the world there is a long list of popular brands that tout Indian inspiration yet are distilled in Britain. So, despite India's role in popularising gin, it has taken many years for home-grown firms to join the party. This all changed in 2018, when three relatives, Sakshi Saigal, Rahul Mehra and Vidur Gupta recognised a worldwide thirst for quality craft gins. Ultimately though, the S&S trio wanted to represent the new face of India - a cool, modern, and forward-looking India.

144 ISLANDS BAY OF ISLANDS

This is the highly anticipated and meticulously hand crafted small-batch 144 Islands New Zealand made Vermouth – infused with locally sourced Northland botanicals, made with finesse and passion by locals.

In collaboration with a craft distiller, Michael Hanna, they have discovered a fascinating machine – a rotary evaporator. It boils the aromatic compounds from the substrate in an extremely low pressure environment, meaning it can boil water at as low a temperature as 18 degrees. This means they were able to extract and preserve the volatile aromatic compounds from a range of materials without damaging or altering them with heat, and so it is a really efficient method of preserving the "essence" of an ingredient. Creating a true reflection of NZ's unique botanicals and sense of place.

"Your Negroni, your martini, your Manhattan and many more would fall perilously short without vermouth. A backbone to heavyweight and newcomer cocktails alike, vermouth doesn't exist solely to amplify others. Rather, the fortified, aromatized wine is a complex, complete pour all on its own."

THE WHISKY CELLAR SCOTLAND

The Whisky Cellar is an Edinburgh-based independent Scotch Whisky bottler, selecting casks from its private stock at the peak of their character.

Started by Keith Bonnington, who states "I am incredibly fortunate to have made a career from something I love and my own contribution to the industry was recognised in 2013 when I was bestowed the honour of becoming a 'Keeper of the Quaich'. More fortunate still to have been able to access, from very reliable and established sources, a wide assortment of incredible casks for my own bottlings. At its heart, Scotch Whisky is for enjoying – whether that's drinking it or collecting it... These series of whiskies from Whisky Cellar are a culmination of my experiences in the industry."

CORAVIN

UNITED STATES

Enjoy your favourite wines without pulling the cork! How does it work, you ask? When the Coravin System is in place, a thin hollow needle is inserted through the cork to extract the wine. The bottle is then pressurised with Argon, an inert gas. Once the bottle has been pressurised, the wine flows through the needle and pours into your glass. When the Coravin System and its needle are removed, the cork reseals itself.

The Coravin system was invented by Greg Lambrecht, a man with a background in physics, mechanical engineering, nuclear power and medical devices.

GABRIEL GLAS

SWITZERLAND

Often the choice of a suitable glass is more difficult than the choice of the right wine.

What is more important to the connoisseur? A cupboard full of glasses or a cellar full of wine?

René Gabriel, a renowned wine writer from Switzerland has designed the ultimate multi purpose glass where every little detail counts.

René explains, “The secret is the “Bouquet drive” at the bottom of the glass that enhances the development of the aroma. The slightly conical glass design concentrates the bouquet regardless of white, red or sweet wines. All of them provide a maximum of enjoyment. The glass remains resistant in spite of its fineness.”

Gabriel Wineglass	24.95

“Swiss wine writer, René Gabriel, has designed a wine glass that, in my view, is brilliant... I can endorse the way that the Gabriel Glass amplifies the wine’s bouquet and is brilliantly fine and light. It’s wafer thin and an absolute delight to use... My wife, Marion, is a huge fan. She’s been nagging me to write a blog promoting Gabriel Glass since we first tried them.”
